

Montana's Pro-Gay CPS Workers Kidnap Children of Christian Parents

By Publisher- May 15, 2020

In one of the most under-reported news stories from Montana in the last several years, radically-leftist and pro-LGBTQ workers with Child Protective Services have virtually kidnapped the adopted children of traditional-minded and Christian parents for purely ideological reasons. The anti-Christian bigotry of these Montana CPS workers is well-substantiated with a myriad of social media postings demonstrating their bias against conservative values. They stole the children of Keith and Raye Newmeyer with the flimsiest of evidence.

Thankfully, sources indicate that the story will soon be told on a much larger scale in national media. It would benefit Montanans to be familiar with the tragic account of this state-sponsored kidnapping and prepare ourselves for a righteous response to it should the story grow larger in the national press.

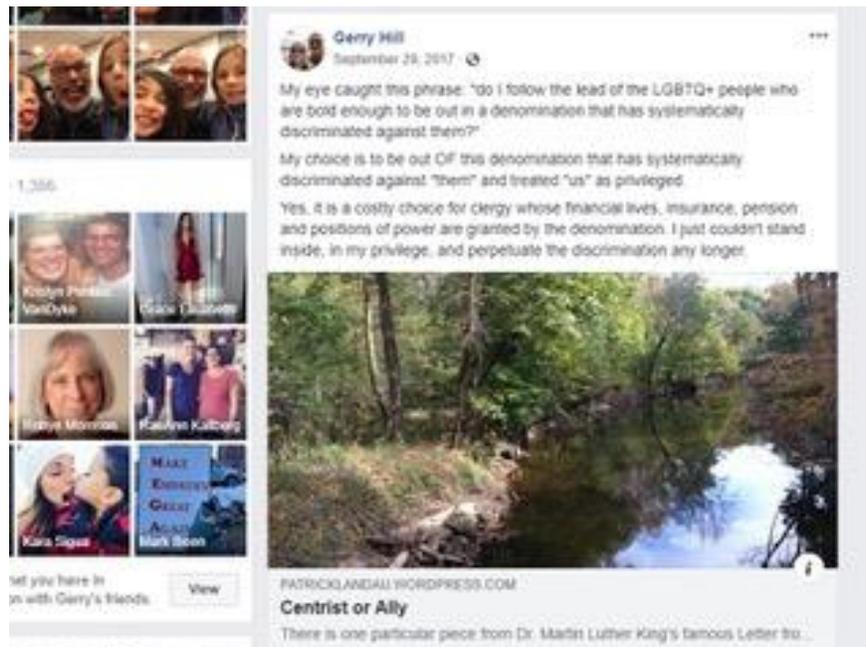

Keith and Raye Newmeyer, who hold traditional Christian views in regard to family and religion, have spoken to the Montana Daily Gazette in length and provided supporting evidence and substantial documentation of their nightmare at the hands of overly-zealous leftist extremists who politicized their parenting methodology and demonized their traditional views as a means to kidnap their children. The two are not without advocates, and one advocate, Cindy Cronce, provided a letter detailing their horror story.

May this letter truly find you well as I urgently solicit your help in a matter of CPS bigotry and retaliation driven by extreme political views and bias against Keith and Raye Newmeyer. In order for my claims to hold any value, however, it's pertinent to note the Newmeyers' background as white conservative Christians before proceeding. Also, attached to this email, ample evidence is provided by the very words of CPS' assigned caseworker, Gerry Hill, and his wife, Robyn Morrison, as well as a counselor named Kristin Best whose involvement was mandated by Gerry. Gerry, Robyn, and Kristin are LGBTQ activists who blatantly and openly rail against white conservatives and conservative mainline denominations. My evidence is collected and presented in such a way as to spare your time and allow quick referencing to substantiate my claims.

According to the letter outlined by Cronce, in 2015 CPS removed the Newmeyer's children, who had been adopted from the Ukraine. Immediately, the initial caseworker deemed reunification of the family as the ultimate goal. Soon after taking the case, however, Gerry Hill determined unilaterally that permanent removal of the children should be his goal.

Sure enough, the evidence of Gerry and Robyn Hill being radical LGBTQ activists is not lacking. In fact, their social media seems to demonstrate that LGBTQ activism is the single greatest ambition of their life. The two left clergy positions in the far-left United Methodist Church because the denomination's inclusion of homosexuality was not strong enough for the pair of activists (see below).

Geoff Browning I must not have been paying attention cuz I didn't realize that you had withdrawn from the UMC. What is CWACM?

7w

Robyn Morrison Geoff Browning The Church Within A Church Movement. www.cwacm.us

7w

Robyn Morrison Geoff Browning also why I could not be appointed to a UMC church. Churches cannot call their own Pastors. In the UMC the Bishops have almost absolute authority

7w

Geoff Browning So it is within the UMC? Yet you can be ordained to it? Are the churches within the CWACM part of the UMC?

I guess this is why I prefer non-hierarchical polity and organizations. It took the PCUSA 30 years to fully welcome LGBTQ folks even without the problems of hierarchy and a world wide communion.

7w

Robyn Morrison Geoff Browning the original inspiration for "church within a church" was Dietrich Bonhoeffer. It's a bit obscure. It is NOT within the UMC but came out of the UMC... a split with Reconciling Ministries. A primary impetus was to ordain those who could not be ordained in the UMC. Currently it has a much broader anti oppression mission.

7w

Annette Dexter There's a huge difference between racial divide and living a Biblically sinful lifestyle. When you were my Pastor, I truly thought you embodied a Christ-like presence in this world... except for one thing, you forgot to tell people "I love you, now go and sin no more." The sin no more part of Jesus' walk on this earth seems to be forgotten in our rush to love others and value everyone. We can love all God's people without condoning their sins. We can welcome them into the church without letting go of the messages in the Bible. I find it interesting that you are leaving the denomination because it's too conservative considering my family left your old church because it was wholly embracing the LGBTQ community to a level of complete lifestyle acceptance. Far too liberal for my taste! Specifically the transgender piece. God made each and every one of us, male and female He made them. If we are born into this world a boy, we are not to change what God has created due to our desire to be something different. We are to live as God designed, not play God ourselves. I'm saddened that our views are so separate now and that someone I felt was so Godly has fallen victim to the ways Satan has manipulated our thinking. I do wish you a speedy recovery from your surgery, but I do not agree with your views. You've studied the Bible much longer than I have, but it seems you've forgotten some pertinent chapters.

Like 1j

Gerry Hill Thank you for responding, Annette. In my view loving someone is not a sin. There are plenty of biblical examples of same gender love. As to gender identity, there is a continuum, not a binary. Some people are born with both genders. Either way, I see a Jesus who died to make space for all at the table.

Like 1j

Gerry Hill I think the challenge for the UMC is right here: how can two people who hold such different understandings of God, Jesus, scripture and grace be in the same denomination? I just don't see how that can work. So I am not in the UMC any longer.

Like 1j

Robyn's blogs reveal a hot hatred for traditional or conservative Christian beliefs and her posts demonstrate a profound bias against Christians. She regularly claims that political conservative beliefs are "anti-refugee" or "white nationalist" and "Christian supremacists" (see below).

The Newmeyers' pastor can even wrote a letter claiming that CPS acted in a "very unprofessional manner in dealing with Keith and Raye Newmeyer and their adopted children. Most astoundingly, the pastor explains that CPS tried to obstruct them "from participating in worship, Bible study, and fellowship in our congregation, especially throughout this very trying time in their family life."

Robyn's own belief system would seem bizarre to most Montanans, as she states on a blog promoting a feminist women's march, "I am a change-maker, prophet, rebel, spiritual guide, and sage. I integrate the material realm with the spiritual to facilitate social transformation."

Amazingly, the actual accusations of wrong-doing regarding the parenting of their children were never forthcoming. The removal of the Newmeyer's children was altogether without explanation. Nonetheless, on top of lot of unfeasible hoops to have their children returned, including limiting their time in church and their faith community, Gerry mandated an LGBTQ activist, Kristin Best, to "counsel" the Newmeyer children.

Lastly, we have Kristin Best, who Gerry mandated to counsel the Newmeyers' children even after they shared concerns over her background. Kristin is also a proud supporter of the LGBTQ movement (Pics H & I).

Read full article here...